1 July.　Genl. Maney came to say that he accepted the arbitration. So went to Herrera y [Óbes, &] told him so. Met Salvañach in the 18 de Julio[1] & had a little walk with him; he remarked on the novelty of a Venezuelan minister coming here, & said the object was to gain the sympathies of South America in their dispute with Great Britain.

2 July.　Took Margaret to Cibils theatre[2] to hear "Faust[3]"; a poor performance, and scarcely any audience.

3 July.　Called on old ... the Callle Dayman: he thinks very little of Mitré's Inferro, & is disgustedwith him for having put his portrait check by joeve with Dante. Has known Mitré formerly during his exile in Chile, but saw very little of him during his stay in Buenos Aires. We talked French. Then to Herrero, & made a change or two in the "Catalina" memorandom: gave him

July 15. Drove with Lucio Piñeyro in the afternoon to the Asilo de Mendigos at La Union, of wch. he is the administrator: it is in the charge of various sisters of mercy[56], the Superior being a French woman. Found about a dozen English men. She says that a large number of them are there thro′ drink; it seems to have made them prematurely old in a horrible manner. Wrote down their names, and said I would visit them again. There was one German, happily employed in one of the workshops. On our way back we visited the Foundling Hospital[57], also managed by the Charity Commission. Met here a mad.[58] Fernando Torres.
